The Göring Gambit This gambit is an off-shoot from the Scotch Game, bearing the name of German player Carl Theodor Göring. White is willing to sacrifice a pawn (sometimes even two pawns) to open up lines for his pieces and to accelerate his piece development. Black needs to think carefully whether or not to accept the pawn sacrifice (s).

G o ring Gambit Declined Black has various ways of declining the gambit. The most reliable are the ones that undermine White's e4-pawn, taking advantage of the fact that 4.c3 is not really a developing move. Tame ways of declining such as 4...d6?! or 4...g6?! allow White to set up a classical two-pawn centre with 5.cxd4.

The Göring Gambit Refused by Shawn L. Svare In this article I shall examine the many plans Black has at his disposal for countering the Göring Gambit, most of which include the undermining of whites e4 pawn. I will even look at my favorite line to the Göring Declined, the development of the king's knight to f6.
