Conflict must draw out the courage of a hero. That's why Gaston or Biff can never be a hero. Those guys are all bravado. They put on the air of a tough guy, but they run when the real fight begins. Heroes show up at the 11th hour. It's not until the last moment when all hope seems lost that a hero distinguishes himself from the rest of the pack.

The hero talk focused on managing yourself. In our daily routine this is no challenge, but in life, circumstances will occasionally arise that demand us to dig deep into our cognitive and emotional reserves to perform under pressures that will tempt us to buckle and to fail and to give up, but when to do so will result in catastrophic consequences for a fellow human.
