Bond Investing for Income and Capital Gains

If you buy a bond when it is first issued, when it matures you should get your money back in full, but your investment is not guaranteed, and you may get back less than you invest. Bond funds come in a variety of guises. Some funds will invest solely, for example, in a basket of government bonds, while others will focus purely on those issued by corporations and some will invest in a mixture of the two. The primary appeal of bonds is they usually provide a regular cash-beating income stream ...

Three ways to invest for income | Barclays Smart Investor

People invest in bonds for a steady income and do not usually expect growth on their investment. Their capital tends to be fairly safe, although some bonds are safer than others. The less safe a bond is perceived to be, the higher the coupon: it has to compensate investors for the risk they are taking.
