Half cookbook, and half brilliantly illustrated descriptions about food and culture in Botswana, as seen through the eyes of Alexander McCall Smith's Mma Ramotswa. A lovely interesting cheery read, although I don't think I'll be attempting most of the recipes (mopane worms, anyone?).

I have read all the books in the series (except the very last one). I also enjoy numerous references to food and cooking in the books, and of course, Mma Potokwani's fruitcake features regularly. A few years ago the flavours of the series were recreated in a cook book called Mma Ramotswa's Cookbook: Nourishment for the Traditionally Built.

I expect there will be a few people who spot this book on the shelves and wonder who Mma Ramotswa is, but Alexander McCall Smith's legion of fans certainly won't be amongst them. This cookbook is a nice tie-in to the books, written with a foreword from AMS himself, and full of flavoursome recipes that are spoken of in his series of books about Mma Ramotswa and her Number One Ladies Detective Agency.
