But, they're not tapestries at all—they're tiny pieces of rolled paper that look like string. Of course, some artists choose to celebrate paper art for what it is, and therefore don't try to hide its origins. One way this is done is through books. Both Isobelle Ouzman and Guy Laramée use discarded books as the starting point for their creations. Ouzman opens the book and extracts pieces of paper while Laramée transforms a novel's edges into sprawling mountainscapes.

After being introduced to the idea of paper as a medium at art school, Calvin Nicholls' first paper sculpture was a collaboration with artist Jonathan Milne back in 1983, and he quickly felt the draw of working in paper. He uses heavy paper stock for structure and lighter paper for fur and fine detail, and he constantly refers to his drawings and study photos to ensure that the assembled pieces are true to the original plan.
