Celebrating the Crime Queens of the Golden Age. The Golden Age of British detective writing was dominated by four female authors who have predictably become known as the Queens of Crime: Agatha Christie, Dorothy L. Sayers, Margery Allingham, and Josephine Tey. There was actually a fifth as well, Ngaio Marsh, but she is usually discounted as she was a New Zealander, although her books are predominantly set in Britain (and many of them are among my personal favorites).

Queens Of Crime The Golden Age Of Crime Fiction ...

The Golden Age of Detective Fiction was an era of classic murder mystery novels of similar patterns and styles, predominantly in the 1920s and 1930s. The Golden Age proper is in practice usually taken to refer to a type of fiction which was predominant in the 1920s and 1930s but had been written since at least 1911 and is still being written—though much less—today.

And because I'm a feminist, I'm going to start with the so-called "Queens of Crime", four British (well, three British and one Kiwi) women who dominated the crime fiction genre in the 1920's and 1930's. These four women challenged cultural norms, asserted themselves in a predominantly male-dominated world, achieved incredible success in a traditionally masculine field, and also happened to write very enjoyable mystery novels, in addition to other literary works.

Queens Of Crime The Golden Age Of Crime Fiction

The Queen of Crime penned 66 mystery novels during her lifetime, many starring her famous detectives Hercule Poirot or Miss Marple. For me it was a toss-up between The Murder of Roger Ackroyd and And Then There Were None, two of Christie's most popular novels, both of which break the rules of Golden Age detective fiction in at least one significant way.
