When I was a boy, there was but one permanent ambition among my comrades in our village on the west bank of the Mississippi River. That was, to be a steamboatman. We had transient ambitions of other sorts, but they were only transient. When a circus came and went, it left us all burning to become clowns; the first negro minstrel show that came to our section left us all suffering to try that kind of life; now and then we had a hope that if we lived and were good, God would permit us to be ...

The Boy's Ambition In the sleepy town of Hannibal, Missouri things are simple and easy. In the mornings things are quite and people are dozing off, but when the steamboats arrive at the wharf things become very hectic. Mornings in Hannibal are quite and sleepy, the streets are empty; people are still sleeping or are in their homes.
