For the longest time, it seemed like the last thing you should expect from Todd Haynes was a simple story. Coming out of the fertile 1990s Sundance scene, he was a provocateur and delirious mash-up artist: his films were fractured narratives, or anti-narratives, or meta-narratives. His best work either mixed together wildly different styles and stories (as in his debut Poison [1991]), or ...

PINNLAND EMPIRE: THE CINEMA OF TODD HAYNES TOLD THROUGH ...

Todd Haynes is an American filmmaker. He is considered a pioneer of the New Queer Cinema movement of filmmaking that emerged in the early 1990s. Haynes first gained public attention with his controversial short film Superstar: The Karen Carpenter Story, which chronicles singer Karen Carpenter's tragic life and death, using Barbie dolls as actors. Haynes had not obtained proper licensing to use the Carpenters' music, prompting a lawsuit from Richard Carpenter, whom the film portrayed in an unflat

The Cinema of Todd Haynes: All That Heaven Allows ...

Best known as a pioneer of the New Queer Cinema movement that emerged in the late 1980s and early 1990s, Haynes foregrounds sexualities that are transgressive, deviant and disruptive. In doing so, he actively recentres the oft-repressed identities of those who sit on the outskirts of dominant culture.

Haynes is an unqualified master of mise-en-scene. Two of Haynes' films are creative biopics (fragmented Citizen Kane-like structure) about David Bowie (Velvet Goldmine) and Bob Dylan (I'm Not There). Haynes is an important figure in the lineage of Queer cinema as well. Poison- perhaps the most direct- Safe ambiguously hints at AIDS. His films have been champions of the outsider, those who have been ostracized, or take the female's perspective—often the homemaker.
